... (The text in this block is a dense, mirrored transcription of the newspaper content, appearing as bleed-through from the reverse side. It contains various headlines, articles, and notices, all written in Persian script. Due to the complexity and volume of the text, it is not fully transcribed here but is represented by this placeholder block.)

... (The text in this block is a dense, vertical column of Persian script, likely a continuation of a historical or literary work. It contains various names, dates, and descriptive passages. Due to the extreme density and vertical orientation, the text is largely illegible for transcription. It appears to be a single column of text spanning the width of the page.)
